From the depths of hell emerges a new form of thriving life, moss rises to the surface to come reclaim what was once theirs on earth. Spreading throughout the world they infest and procreate. As I attempt to contain them in some sort of effort to exterminate them, I soon come to realise that containing them would be futile. Instead, I decide to get rid of them permanently and return them to where they belong, under the earth's crust. In biblical style, they can ascend to heaven and recommence their destructive life cycle on a higher plane.
